

Two Souls Lite now available free-to-play exclusively on gaming website Gamonaut

Wednesday, 16th April, 2014: Student studios studying with Train2Game have joined forces to release Two Souls on free to play 3D gaming website: Gamonaut. A Lite version of the game developed by Derp Studios is exclusively available on Icey Monty's popular gaming website. The partnership has come together as both studios won a Swan PR Train2Game competition to gain free PR for a month.

Gamonaut developed by Icey Monty has around 1/2million plays on its site to date and its numbers are rapidly growing. Two Souls is one of Derp Studio's many popular gaming releases, the full version of the game is now available to buy on Android and Windows Phone 8, with planned release on iOS in the near future.

Nick Walker, Director, Icey Monty, said: "Two Souls has an original mechanic that makes it challenging and gives players a new experience. It's perfect for the web and mobile markets. Derp has been brilliant, both in terms of getting the game ready and with the teams enthusiasm for the cooperation. We're excited about giving Two Souls more outreach, and that ends up being mutually beneficial."

Christopher Ledger, CEO, Derp Studios: "With John and Nick's experience with building web games combined with our knowledge of games, I think we can cover a lot of audiences on both PC and mobile. We've made a totally exclusive version of Two Souls for Gamonaut, dedicated to players using the keyboard. The levels are unique, so when players buy the game on mobile they will have fresh new content."
